PARTNER SPOTLIGHT

MORAN

Moran Technology Consulting (Moran) has served as trusted advisors to over 350 higher education institutions, including providing Identity and Access Management (IAM) strategic consulting to over 100 colleges and universities.

IAM is not simply a technology challenge, it is a business opportunity. It is more than just “middleware” (better unseen, like plumbing). An effective IAM program can be an agent for transformational change and continuous improvement, rather than a blocker or barrier to your most critical initiatives. An IAM program is a complex collection of people, processes, policies, and technology. And a mature IAM program is critical to the digital transformation of every institution - enabling improved digital experience, greater administrative automation, reduced cybersecurity and compliance risks, and more. To address these strategic objectives requires an IAM program that acknowledges that it is the people, policies, and business process behind the data that drives automation. To be effective, IAM program roadmaps must be aligned to academic and business priorities. Without business alignment, IAM will fail.

A mature IAM program should include:

- Executive awareness to sustain investment and reduce organizational barriers.
- Strategic alignment with the most critical needs of the institution.
- Cross-campus institutional collaboration.
- Process redesign to supports onboarding, offboarding, and access governance.
